

An annotated list of the vascular plants growing without cultivation in the Town of Falmouth (Barnstable Co.), Massachusetts¹

Richard H. Backus and Pamela T. Polloni

It has been suggested (by Aimlee Laderman) that this “flora of Falmouth” be put on line so as to make an up-dated version more easily accessible to interested parties. We thank Dr. Laderman, are adding the document to the BCCCI website, and are sorry we haven’t done so earlier. We invite improvements to the list-- both the elimination of errors and additions to it by the discovery of species not already on the list (we call attention to a few species not known from Falmouth, but which are known from nearby Bourne or Mashpee) and by the finding of other species not collected in Falmouth for many years. We particularly note native species in the latter category, some of which have always been rare (certain orchids, for instance), others of which have become rare or perhaps extirpated in Falmouth with the loss of certain habitats (species of old fields, for instance).

Originally the backbone of the list came from Fogg's flora of the Elizabeth Islands (Fogg 1930), the supposition having been that the plants occurring on those islands (which are not a part of Falmouth) would occur also on the adjacent mainland or mostly so. As a Falmouth record becomes evident the reference to Fogg is dropped, and there will be no such reference in the finished list. Further, all Carex species given by Svenson and Pyle's "The flora of Cape Cod" (1975) are temporarily listed. A few species, probably only temporary members of the flora (waifs), are temporarily maintained. The compilers also have written a number of notes to themselves that eventually will be expunged.

The title of earlier versions of this work included the words “and sexually reproducing” after “growing”, but we now omit this qualification as it would eliminate from consideration a number of plants about which there is curiosity-- the interesting American chestnut, for example.

To be listed here a species must be substantiated by an herbarium sheet made from a Falmouth specimen. Finders of desirable plant material are encouraged to see such material documented in or added to the MBLWHOI Library Herbarium (SPWH), housed in the McLean Building on WHOI's Quisset campus. They should contact the curators as there are simple legal (certain rare plants are protected) and sanitation (mainly insect) issues to be dealt with.

The first version of this list followed the phylogeny of Gray's Manual (Fernald 1950) with names mostly brought into conformance with Kartesz and Kartesz (1980). For the second version names mostly followed Gleason & Cronquist (1991) (some from early volumes of the "Flora of North America north of Mexico" (Morin 1993)) with species in alphabetical order within genera. Names in this third version have been altered to conform to the so far published volumes of the FNA (2, 3, 4, 5, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 25 and 26). The names of species not treated in those volumes are in conformance with “The vascular plants of Massachusetts-- a county checklist” (Sorrie & Somers 1999), which mostly follows Kartesz (1994). Both families, genera within families, and species within genera are in alphabetical order.

The following are given in the order stated for each taxon in the list: (1) the primary name as described above, (2) such a common name or names as please the compilers, (3) the oldest record for Falmouth substantiated by an herbarium specimen, (4) the most recent, or a current, substantiated Falmouth record (extra records may be included temporarily), (5) certain literature records for Falmouth deemed valid (when literature records are cited, "Falmouth" is understood and no locality is given unless more specific than that), (6) sometimes notes on the habitat in Falmouth, and (7) remarks, including notice of particular Falmouth localities and the Massachusetts status of those species considered rare by Commonwealth authorities. In a few cases, sight records are given when it was not wished to collect the plant owing to its rarity.

In 3 and 4, there are given (a) herbarium name and number for the specimen, (b) the collector and her or his collection number (in parentheses), (c) the locality (generally in the collector's terms but not usually a quotation), and (d) the date of collection. For the last, years of the 20th century are written without the "19".

The months of the year are abbreviated by their first three letters (e.g. Sep).

Conventions observed: period after name; successive herbarium records separated by semicolon; no punctuation within individual records; end of herbarium records and beginning of literature records separated by period; no punctuation after family or generic names; period at the end of the entry for each taxon including varieties of one species; comma between scientific and common name; family and genus centered; species after one tab; species' scientific name italicized; generic name bold; family name large; hybrids are indicated by an x just before the scientific name and the parent species shown in brackets just after the name; when indicating which of two features with the same name by using points of the compass a capital letter is used. The names of alien species are put in CAPS.
